

LITTLE BOY'S SACQUE COAT.

BY EMILY H. MAY.

WE give, this month, a diagram for cutting a little Boy's Sacque Coat, suitable for fall wear. It is exceedingly simple, so that any mother can make it, with the aid of our pattern; yet it is neat, and even pretty, as may be seen from the cut.

This little garment is made of white quilting and trimmed with several rows of fringes and buttons.

No. 1. Half the cloak; it being formed of two parts just alike, joined together by a seam down the back. The bent line shows the fold of the shoulder and of the sleeve.

No. 2. Collar of the cloak.

This mantelet is to be made of either embroidered muslin or silk. It is trimmed with a deep flounce of the same material as the mantle itself. The flounce should be about three yards and a quarter long to go round the mantle, ten inches deep from the point to the shoulder seam, and diminishing in front to six inches.
