QUEEN VICTORIA'S PARLIAMENTS.—The Parliament which passed into the region of history in March, 1874, was the eighth Parliament which had been assembled under the reign of her Majesty, and the tenth since the passing of the first Reform Bill. The Parliament which was sitting at the death of William IV., in June, 1837, came to an end in the following month by the demise of the Crown, and the new Parliament elected in the August, which met in the November of that year, was dissolved in June, 1841, having lasted four years. Her Majesty's second Parliament, elected in August, 1841, was dissolved in July, 1847, having lasted nearly six years. Her third Parliament, which met in the November of the same year, was dissolved in July, 1852, having lasted about four years and three-quarters. The fourth Parliament of her Majesty met in November, 1852, and was dissolved in March, 1857, having lasted four years and a half. The fifth Parliament of her Majesty was the briefest in its duration, having met in April, 1857, and having been dissolved in the spring of 1859, after a life of little more than two years' duration. The next Parliament, which assembled in April, 1859, lasted six years, being dissolved early in 1865; and her Majesty's seventh Parliament lasted from the spring of 1865 to the autumn of 1868, about three years and a half. The eighth Parliament, known as Mr. Gladstone's Parliament, was elected in November and December, 1868, and enjoyed an existence of a little over five years. Consequently, it lived longer than any of its predecessors, except only those of 1817 and 1859-65. As her Majesty has now reigned above thirty-seven years, it will be seen upon an easy calculation that the average duration of the Parliaments which have been assembled at Westminster under Queen Victoria has been a little over four years and a half.
