THE NATIONAL DEBT.—From a Parliamentary return issued during the Session 1876, we learn that since the year 1857-8 the total reduction effected in the National Debt, taking into account the diminished capital value of the terminable annuities, has been £91,905,223. Of this reduction, slightly more than one half has been by means of terminable annuities. But during the same nineteen years new debt has been created to the amount of £28,656,441. The net reduction in the debt has, therefore, been £63,248,782. At the beginning of the period under review—that is, in 1857-8—the total amount of the National Debt was £839,519,326. The amount given for 1876 is £776,270,544. Of the new debt created, £20,119,302 is in stock or terminable annuities, and £8,537,139 is unfunded. The greater part of the new debt has been incurred for reproductive purposes. The unproductive debt for fortifications and army localisation is represented by £9,916,250 in stock or the equivalent of stock, and £2,037,193 unfunded, making together £11,953,389. The reproductive debt consists of the purchase money of the elegraphs and of the Suez Canal, and the loans advanced to local authorities. The telegraph stock amounts to £10,203,052; and the Exchequer Bonds issued last year for the purchase of the Suez Canal amounted to £3,300,000. These two items together make up £13,503,052, which, added to the unproductive debt incurred for advances to local authorities.
