

of nobleness or dignity. In the Millers' house might be seen the twelfth chapter to the Romans done into action.

"He was my constant correspondent, friend, and adviser for four-and-twenty years. No one living took, or appeared to take, a hundredth part of the interest that he did, in what I thought and wrote. But he is gone; nor can I hope in the remainder of my course ever to find one with whom I should become united by the same strong ties of personal regard and intellectual sympathy."

BENJAMIN TRAVERS, ESQ.

March 6. At his residence, Green-street, Grosvenor-square, aged 76, Benjamin Travers, Esq., Serjeant-Surgeon to Her Majesty.

Mr. Travers was the son of a wealthy and influential city merchant, and received his education at the grammar-school of the Rev. E. Cogan, at Cheshunt. At the age of 16 he was transferred to his father's counting-house, but, taking a distaste to mercantile pursuits, his father was induced to article him, in 1809, to Mr., afterwards Sir Astley Paston Cooper, Bart., for the term of six years, during which time he enjoyed the advantage of witnessing, and profiting largely by, the admirable talents of his master, whose fame was rapidly extending as a hospital surgeon and teacher. Under his preceptor's auspices, he established a clinical society among the pupils, to which he acted as secretary. On the 17th of October, 1806, he passed his examination at the College of Surgeons, immediately after which he repaired to Edinburgh, where he made the acquaintance of some of the most distinguished savans. After a pedestrian tour of the Scotch and English lakes, he settled in London, having married the daughter of Mr. W. Morgan, founder of the Equitable Life Assurance Office. He was now appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy at Guy's Hospital. In 1810 Mr. Travers was appointed surgeon to the Ophthalmic Hospital. In 1815 he was elected one of the surgeons to St. Thomas's Hospital, having been admitted a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1813. In 1827 he was chosen President of the Hunterian, and in 1828 President of the Medico-Chirurgical Society. In 1833 he became a member of the Council of the College of Surgeons, and of the Court of Examiners of the Veterinary College. In July, 1847, the highest collegiate honour was conferred on him, that of President—a post he again filled in 1856-57. In 1813 Mr. Travers was again married to the eldest daughter of Mr. G. Millett, one of the Directors of the East India Company. This lady dying, he married for the third time in 1831, the youngest daughter of Colonel Stevens. The deceased had contributed largely to the advancement of medical and surgical knowledge by the publication of works of great merit, for which he had been rewarded with the diploma of many learned and scientific European institutions. In speaking of the deceased as an operator, the "Lancet," a great authority in these matters, states that "Mr. Travers was never celebrated as a rapid, dashing, or showy operator: frequently, however, his operative dexterity was most admirable, and he has often in the operating theatre received the public commendation of his great master and colleague Sir Astley Cooper. One thing respecting his operative career all have allowed—namely, the remarkable safety that has followed his knife, which is certainly one of the tests, and not the meanest test, of sound and genuine surgery."
